BARNEY HICKEN MURDOCK 1921

I was born 25 September 1921 in Heber City to Emily Hicken and Nymphus Murdock. I received my education in Heber and Fruitland and rode horses six miles to school. I graduated from Wasatch High School.

We lived on a ranch on Current Creek. The family moved to town for school in the winter. I learned ranching and farming from my father and always had a great love for horses and livestock. I was with my father in the winter of 1936 when we rolled over a truck loaded with firewood. It broke Dad's back and several ribs. I pulled him out from under the truck and in doing so I dislocated his right shoulder. He never went back to ranching after the accident. He sold out and moved to Heber. I worked for various farmers in Heber and two summers for Broadbents in Wyoming before graduation.

I tied about my age and started working in mines in Keetley when I was seventeen years old. I got in construction work and worked as a carpenter during construction of Geneva Steel and Tooele Army Depot. I served two and a half years in the Navy and was discharged in 1945. I worked in construction from navy time until 1951 when Grace and I and the two kids moved to Ely, Nevada and went into business with my brother Carl in an auto body shop. We stayed in Ely until 1975 and then moved to California where I worked in construction until I retired in 1986.

We bought a new Chevrolet Suburban and Travel Trailer and moved to Ely and turned into Snowbirds. Now we are travelling around the country fishing and trying to spend our six kids inheritance.

Bulb Piles on Jersey Shore

The following was taken from the Raymond Record, house or-brow, saw me surveying the site of the Raymont Construction Company. By Pat Lynn: "The heat waves, rising from the boardwalk in their familiar undulating pattern, distorted the image that loomed above the sand in the distance. As I walked closer, a faint rumbling noise became a distinct pounding, filling the landscape with gentle vibrations which seemed to roll across the beach to meet the incoming waves."

JOE HILTON

BARNEY MURDOCK

A young man stood near the box (which now it could be seen was filled with sand) and as he ally became clearer. In an open space along the building-cluttered boardwalk rose a huge box which appeared like a sea chest suspended on stilts. The large objects on the site dwarfed a handful of men scattered about the area.

THE SCENE AHEAD gradually became clearer. In an open space along the building-cluttered boardwalk rose a huge box which appeared like a sea chest suspended on stilts. The large objects on the site dwarfed a handful of men scattered about the area.

into the cool, damp recess below. "WITH ALL THE WEIGHT on its center leg or jack, which rests on a completed pile," he said as he pointed out the hydraulic jack and other equipment used for the load test, "this 280-ton load of sand and wooden beams serves as a test for the supportive strength of the pile. Nitrogen gas is the force that pushes fluid through the hose into the jack to give it its uplifting ability. A pressure gauge registers the tannage being tested and this Ames dial indicates the settlement of the pile to one thousandth of an inch. Right now the load is 180 tons. The load design of 120 tons has been successfully verified, but we'll load test up to 240 tons, anyway."

AS WE STEPPED INTO the warm sun again, Murdock called to a man leaving a trailer with a sign reading "Raymond International Inc., Project superintendent Joe Hilton greeted us and suggested that we walk in the direction of the pilerdriver. As we walked along, he explained the functions of various crew members.

Hilton was on loan to the Bulb Pile Department from the Company's Research and Mechanical Engineering Department. Because of his expertise he was on the site to supervise the work and to improve the equipment for driving the bulb pile — a relatively young member of the Company's foundation services. The bulb pile foundation is unique for its ability to support heavy loads at shallow depths — an average of 11 feet deep on this project. A bulb is produced underground at the foot of the pile and provides great strength by virtue of its broad base and by compacting and this improving the surrounding soil. Because of its unusual strength, fewer piles are generally needed than other types of pile foundations.

"THE BULB PILE IS driven by dropping a 7000-pound hammer from a height of 20 feet," explained Hilton, shouting now to make himself heard above the din of the hammer. "The hammer is dropped through a steel-wall drive tube containing a seven-cubic-foot plug of non-slump concrete. As the hammer hits the concrete and forces it through the sand, the drive tube is also pulled downwards."

The bulb pile works most successfully under favorable conditions such as sand and gravel which are not dense enough to offer the resistance needed with conventionally driven piles, and was specified for this site by the architect.

"When the expanded bulb base is formed at the desired depth," Hilton continued, as we passed a stock of hollow, corrugated shells, "a Raymond shell is dropped into the shaft, sealed in the bulb with concrete and the drive tube is removed."

AS HILTON DESCRIBED the piling process, the heavy hammer fell repeatedly and paused only every 250 or so blows while the crawler mounted rig was moved to the next pile location.

We came to within a few yards of the pilerdriver and directed our attention to the leads on the front of the rig. Pile foreman Nick Wagner scrambled up the leads at critical moments to make certain the bulb was formed correctly without the intrusion of sand or water.

Wagner indicated the wear on the cable and eye had been alleviated considerably since Hilton had worked on various modifications for connecting the steel cable to the hammer.

EVIDENCE OF Hilton's initiative could be seen elsewhere on the site. The shells, which form a casing for the pile column, were being readied for use by two welders doing the "dixie splice" — the utilization of several short pieces of shell to make one 12-foot shell by inserting one end inside of another and welding them together. Other crew members were checking shells to make certain no water was in them before being filled with concrete.

"Once the column is filled with concrete and the shell stump is leveled to the pile cut-off grade," said Hilton, "the pile is finished."

The tour of the site ended when the sun was almost directly overhead and the crew shutdown to eat their midday meal.

Since this story was written, Joe Hilton has been transferred from the Research and Mechanical Engineering Department and appointed construction manager of the Bulb Pile Department. He was recently in Heber City to visit his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Hilton and family and enjoy the deer hunt.

Appreciation...

We appreciate the vote of confidence given us in the recent Midway Town elections. We express our thanks and appreciation to all who helped make this possible.

We will do our best to serve the town and its citizens.

We shall also try to keep "Midway, the best place to live and rear our families."
